

As multiple displays share their data signals, time multiplexing is used to give each display its data to be shown.

This time-multiplexing should be refreshed periodically to ensure that all displays receive their data at the proper time.