

These are the benefit of the single-cycle design approach

- 1- The circuit can receive data in each clock cycle and can increase the circuit performance if the circuit can accept the maximum clock frequency available for the FPGA.
- 2- The circuit can generate output in each clock cycle which can provide high throughput.
- 3- Potentially it can reduce the handshaking during communication with other single-cycle modules.